Mitch and Dave Maggetti have been in the residential design industry for more than 30 years. Today, the co-owners of Maggetti Construction deliver remodels and new construction projects alike with detail and precision. Such attention to quality has contributed to a portfolio boasting structures in nearly every style, from contemporary to traditional and everything in between. But aesthetics isn't the only area in which Maggetti Construction has earned a reputation. In addition to its residences, the firm has become known for the construction of outdoor living spaces with a focus on sustainable materials. Asked to describe their favorite aspects of the job, Mitch and Dave note the freedom and flexibility their schedule affords, as well as the opportunity to work with the industry's foremost designers and architects. Always looking forward to the next project, and executing each endeavor with honesty, quality and professionalism in mind, Mitch, Dave and their team strive to achieve each client's exacting specifications.

This soft, modern home was built with the luxury of the rooms adjoining each other, from the interior to the exterior deck, and back again. All rooms have views through azure-tinted glass, with Fleetwood glass walls.

“We cater to the client for the life of the home.”

How do you stay “in the know”?

Mitch: We stay current with trends and new building materials, and we are always learning. Dave: We keep up with the latest technology and surround ourselves with knowledgeable tradesmen.

Standout projects?

Mitch: A five-year restoration of a turn-of-the-century home with an ultramodern interior. Dave: I think our two personal homes. They are very different in style, but also have similarities.

Favorite store to shop? Where is it, and why is it your favorite?

Dave: A home store in Gustavia, St. Barts. It offers handmade items from France, which are never duplicated. Every piece is an original.

What’s on your desk?

Mitch: Photos of my children, hunting knives and some unique paperweights.
